

CHARITY PARTNERSHIPS AND FUNDRAISING POLICY

POLICY STATEMENT

M&S aims to make a positive contribution to society by championing causes that matter to our customers and supporting communities where we operate. In many cases this involves partnering with or fundraising for a charity. To protect the M&S brand, it is critical that charity relationships are managed professionally with the appropriate level of due diligence and adherence to policies.

BACKGROUND

Our customers are charitable and expect us to support good causes. As an organisation we donate money to a range of charities and we also allow colleagues to engage with customers and members of the public to fundraise for chosen causes. The conduct of any charity and business partnership is high profile and reflects on our brand and so it is important that such relationships are professionally managed.

YOUR RESPONSIBILITIES

Ensure you understand and comply with M&S policies noting that M&S does NOT offer charitable support to:

- Personal appeals or sponsorship of individuals e.g. funding medical treatment or an overseas trip for someone
- Political causes
- Religious bodies, unless the support being given is non-denominational and non-sectarian. For example, you can support a church if the money is used to benefit people of any religion
- Third party fundraising on a charity's behalf. Money must go directly to the charity for a known cause
- Advertising for a charity to promote their cause

M&S supports:

- Organisations that are run not for profit and provide a public benefit, including registered charities, Community Interest Companies (CIC), Charitable Unincorporated Associations, Charitable Incorporated Associations and Charitable Trusts
- We also support limited companies who have a charitable purpose or public benefit

Onboarding:

All new charity partnerships need to be signed off by the central Community Team and processed through appropriate governance before any agreements are made to ensure it fits within the overall framework of charity partners and so that the appropriate level of due diligence can be carried out.

Its important that M&S see through commitments made. Agreeing to fundraise for a charity but not doing anything causes negative impact for the charity and the M&S brand. Last minute changes to plans can have a disproportionate negative impact on organisations relying on goodwill from volunteers. Money raised for the charity must be donated in the financial year in which it is raised.

- Charity donations over £50 will need line manager approval
- Charity donations over £5k will need approval by any two of CEO, CFO and Corporate Affairs Director (following a recommendation from the Community Team).
- Charity donations over £50k will be notified to the ESG Committee.

Exiting:

Any changes to existing charity partnerships, including broadening of scope and exiting completely, need to be communicated to the central Community Team so that this can be managed in the most appropriate way.
